

How Long Do Hemorrhoids Last? - How to Get rid of them Quicker

There are four distinctive stages of grades of hemorrhoid development. Depending on which stage you have reached will depend on how long your hemorrhoids will last.

The First or the Very Least Severe Stage is Symptomatic of Blood on the Stool

There is rarely any pain felt and often people who are in this stage will not know that they have hemorrhoids or piles as they are sometimes called. If you do discover blood in your stool and suspect that you have piles, then just a small change in your diet will cure the problem. This should get no more than a day or two.

The second stage is a little more severe and is symptomatic of a prolapse becoming widespread when your bowels are under pressure. A prolapse normally protrudes from the body during times of pressure, such as when sneezing, coughing or have a bowel movement. The prolapse re-enters the body by itself one the pressure is released. A change in diet will help. There are a variety of foods that will help your body to overcome this disorder faster and there are foods that you should avoid currently. Recovery may take four to six days with the correct diet.

- The third stage is actually when the prolapse will not re-enter the body after pressure is not longer exerted and also required manual manipulation.
- A drastic change in diet is required and there are also topical ointments that will help to relieve the discomfort.
- The most disconcerting feature of this stage is the irritability and blood that often accompanies it.
- Treatment may take a few days to show results and you can expect to be on the road to recovery within two weeks.
